Talk to your partner and HIV testing provider today about testing together.

What are the benefits of testing together?

Within couples, partners sometimes have different HIV test results, and they may not know it.

testing together allows you and your partner to learn your HIV test results together, so you can support one another through the process.

testing together doesn't focus on the past. You don't have to talk about things you don't want to with your partner – we just don't go there.

testing together does create a safe space for you and your partner to make plans for your future based on both your HIV test results and your relationship status.

Keep your family and your new baby safe and healthy.

Getting an HIV test alone can be difficult, if not downright scary. Telling your partner the results can be even more challenging.

testing together provides the opportunity for you and your partner to get your HIV test and results together. An HIV testing provider will help you discuss the results in a safe and confidential environment.

testing together and receiving your results together can help start a valuable conversation between you and your partner about HIV in your relationship. An HIV testing provider will discuss with you how to keep each other safe and healthy.

5 easy steps for testing together

1. Contact our office to schedule an appointment or learn the best time to come in for testing together.
2. When you arrive at the clinic, a provider will explain how the service works and determine your eligibility to test together.
3. If eligible, you will meet with a provider who will talk to you about your joint HIV risk concerns. You will both be tested for HIV.
4. When your HIV test results are ready, the provider will deliver them to both of you at the same time.
5. The provider will help you and your partner develop a plan for the future and answer any questions you might have.
